The program has been around since 2008 and is compatible with most newer versions of Windows, and iPhone, iPad, Android, Symbian. [1] Part (b) of the plaintiff's fourth cause of action requests punitive damages for assault and battery and malicious prosecution. See generally Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 50, 103 S.Ct. 1625, 1638, 75 L.Ed.2d 632 (1983). The plaintiff apparently intends to include the count for punitive damages in one count of her complaint. The Court therefore will construe plaintiff's request for punitive damages as an alternative to compensatory damages and treat the request for punitive damages along with the request for compensatory damages as a single cause of action for the same reasons explained above. [2] The parties have agreed to use the term "cross-examination" to refer to the use of leading questions at trial. [3] It is not clear whether plaintiff intends to argue that defendant failed to prove that his authority to proceed with the arrest was not limited. Such a claim would obviously be foreclosed by the Court's finding that the plaintiff and defendant agreed that the arrest was to proceed. Q: Why can't I use my new account in chat? I got a new Google account yesterday and signed up to SO as well. Apparently, all of the accounts are connected automatically, but I can't use the new account when I try to register. I can verify that the new account has a reputation of zero, but I'm still marked as a new user. Help? A: The scope of any chat account is governed by: the account being logged in the site the account is associated with and being associated with a specific site, means that the only people who can use that account are those who are already registered at the target site - so no, you cannot use the new account without registering for the target site. So, if you want to chat at SO, you have to register for SO.
