However, there are some quesries that I found in the book. In chapter three, it discusses human perceptive and it talks about which kind of objects activate the senses more. I found this section a little bit strange because I find design by observing the things that I encounter every day. In my opinion, it is very normal and understandable to observe a thing and understand what it is and how to use it. It is logical to see a book on how to make a kitchen or a notebook on how to make a pen. It is strange to observe that the authors were concerned about understanding what kind of objects activate the perceptive more. In the next chapter, it starts to discuss
