Editor's note: Below is a reader submission from David. He didn't get his real name, but we are grateful to him for sharing his story. –the "Co-op Magazine" staff I don't know why, but I've always had a bit of a distrust and fear towards cops. Well, maybe because I'm a victim of my first crime, the one that ruined my life. I was 17, and I had a neighbor who was kind of a friend and I was into weed, so we would go out to the park and roll. He told me there was a kid that was a drug dealer and had some weapons. I went along with it, but I only saw the weapons, never saw the kid. After they found the weapon I gave it up, but he went around telling people I had the gun. To this day, I don't know why I just didn't get arrested, but that's how my life went from then on. I've never been a violent person, but the cops were always being a nuisance and it's just funny I know, but you're always the victim of something. I'm still wondering how long the cops would have let me go if I got arrested for possession and distribution, but they knew who I was since the person who had the gun told me who to contact.
