App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1990, pet. ref'd). C. Analysis Here, the trial court summarily denied the motion as to Whitson, and the record shows that Whitson received a copy of the motion and a factual basis for the motion in the form of the State's response to his first motion for forensic DNA testing, attached to the State's response. Whitson's second motion also met the specificity requirements, alleging the State withheld the results of the DNA testing 13 until after Whitson's motion had been denied and that a reasonable probability existed that had the testing been performed on the relevant biological material more than five years earlier, the results of the testing would have provided exculpatory evidence. The second motion did not identify the biological material or the genetic markers tested or the sample previously tested. The record shows that the State provided Whitson with the relevant test results after the trial court denied his first motion. 2 The State informed Whitson that the test
