The educational perspectives of postgraduate midwives on continuing education in Finland. Postgraduate midwifery education in Finland follows a teacher-centred model, and the main issue for the midwifery curriculum is the competence of the teacher. Continuing education for midwives is a practice that is widely regarded as one of the midwife's core activities. The aim of this paper was to explore postgraduate midwives' perceptions of continuing education in Finland and determine if and how they differ from views of midwifery students. A qualitative study using semi-structured interviews was conducted among a purposive sample of postgraduate midwives from five universities in Southern Finland. The interviews were recorded, transcribed verbatim and analysed using qualitative content analysis. Five themes emerged in the interviews. Participants showed a favourable attitude towards continuing education and a desire to learn. They agreed that continuing education was a common activity among midwives and that its importance was increasing. They also recognized that their time for continuing education was limited. However, they also discussed the lack of skills in traditional learning methods, and the usefulness of new technologies in continuing education. Their need for interactive learning experiences and more contact with midwives who work in local hospitals was a recurrent theme. Participants also recognized that there were many obstacles to continuing education. These included the problem of finding teachers who were competent, were of a high quality, had a high sense of responsibility and who were committed to the continuing education of midwives. The results of the study indicate that there is a need to formulate and implement a strategy to improve midwives' continuing education in Finland. This may include developing methods of teacher recruitment and education, or a shift to face-to-face teaching as a learning environment.
