There has been a lot of speculation lately about who really won the 2017 Stanley Cup, which I didn't really care about. What I did care about was that the 2017 Stanley Cup final felt lacking in any kind of competitive series. Sure, we had a few good fights, but ultimately, the stakes were so low throughout the playoffs, that the final was almost boring. And although the Blackhawks are regarded as one of the most beautiful teams to watch in the NHL, it only seemed fitting that, after they won the cup, you almost could not tell that the Blackhawks won. Since then, the Blackhawks won the 2018 Stanley Cup, and quite frankly, it made a much bigger impact than last year's championship. This year, they beat the Tampa Bay Lightning in a series full of epic battles between two of the best young players in the league. Not only that, but they beat the Tampa Bay Lightning without some of their top offensive weapons. They beat Tampa Bay with Vezina-caliber goaltending, combined with a defense and penalty kill that was up there with the best in the league.

The 2018 Stanley Cup champion was the best of the best, and while Tampa Bay was the more consistent team from game to game, Chicago made Tampa Bay's strengths their weaknesses. The Blackhawks played defense first, and as long as they kept it simple on the back end, they were doing just fine. The Blackhawks also had super-star forwards like Patrick Kane and Jonathan Toews who held the line against Tampa's top players, making them a lot easier to shut down. Their transition game was also stellar, and they had a ton of assists along the way. This team didn't win the cup on goaltending alone, it won the cup on a core group of defensemen and forwards, as well as some fine scouting and team-first mentality. Without their captain, Jonathan To
