Even though you can learn the basics of Photoshop in a short amount of time, working with the advanced tools requires an in-depth knowledge and much practice before you can use them effectively. The program's name has become so common in common parlance that people often don't know what it stands for. Photoshop sometimes is referred to as simply "an image editing program." Knowing the name of the program you're using helps you to identify whether a file has been manipulated (or _Photoshopped_) by the person who created it. Some of Photoshop's more advanced features include creating photomontages, creating and manipulating special effects for an image, creating and manipulating masks, and creating and modifying layers. Creating digital images in Photoshop makes a lot of sense. All you need is a good image editing program. Although Photoshop is the industry standard, if you have $500 burning a hole in your pocket, another application might make more sense. For example, Corel's Elements is a free, easy-to-use image editing and composing program for the Macintosh and Windows platforms.

ALVEYNE — A large gathering of concerned citizens took to the streets of Alveyne on Saturday, Apr. 13, with more than 400 people demonstrating against a draft water quality plan that they say could lead to contaminated drinking water. The Blue Ridge Environmental Defense League hosted the demonstration, which was led by a new organization called the Committee for Clean Water and Safe Drinking Water. “We’re not having this fight again,” said Bob Sheely, a member of the Committee for Clean Water and Safe Drinking Water. “We’re just out here, in the open, letting people know what’s going on, and letting people know that we’re back. And we’re back and we’re going to fight.” The draft Alveyne plan proposes a 70,000 gallon addition to the monitoring well at the West Fork Blue Ridge Site, for a total of 300,000 gallons per year. It also proposes to adjust the well to serve the needs of the community, including for agricultural purposes. In the coming year, the committee has plans to provide educational information to residents, promote awareness and get people to take action. “We want to make sure that people know what’s going on, what our concerns are, so they can vote appropriately,” Sheely said. “We think that is critical. Because if people don’t know what’s going on, how will they be able to vote to the detriment of clean water or to the detriment of the health of their children? That’s why it’s so important.” In addition to providing information and advocating for clean water, the committee will also promote and provide resources for healthier drinking water. “We’re going to work on and develop strategies to implement low-cost, clean-water friendly solutions,” Sheely said. “We’re going to look at a lot of the problems that we see: land and water, salt-water intrusion, lead-based paint, lead in pipes, lead in school work, lead in kids’ games, lead in water — you name it. And we’re going to work hard to see that that problem is taken care of.” The committee is still working out exactly how it will inform residents of the plan, but it has already started a Facebook
