Shocking as that may be it turns out that Rob Matthews hasn't been quite as innocent as he'd have us believe. Turns out Rob used to be a professional cyclist before he became a commentator on The Bike Channel, a position he's in now. We have all grown to hate him over the years, however the true extent of his cycling past and its' potential influence on his commentary will hit you like a hammer blow. Rob's cycling career has seen him race at the Worlds, the Tour de France, 5 British national championship titles and 2 years as a Professional race-team "rider". Basically, Rob Matthews once had the life, seen all the best of the best races, ridden up to the podium at the worlds and the Tour, and won a lot of races. The only trouble for Rob's "golden" cycling years is that he apparently worked in a circus whilst racing and that may have taken its toll on him. No word on whether the circus was out of action or if he was just trying to pull a fast one. In 2009, Rob Matthews reported on BBC 2's 'Troof' for four episodes. Troof is the name of the BBC programme on religion, and it's been an unlucky week for the
