From the civil wars to bloody revenge. Each side shows their strength and right to take out their enemy. The battle takes place in the most highly fortified city in Africa, Tripoli, Libya. This same story shows up over and over again in not only news, but in the cultural myths of many nations. In the United States we have the tale of the movie "Dances With Wolves," where the white plains Indians and the braves war against each other, as well as the battle of Jericho. Or we have the tale of Columbus and the Native Americans in the New World who, in a final act of violence, cut the heads off of the men, women and children they captured. The same story shows up as mythological thought in such cultures as France and Japan. The French have the myth of Robin Hood, which takes the local forces to be the nobility, who hunt down and destroy this anarchic gentleman who helps the poor and the downtrodden. The Japanese have the myth of The Lone Samurai of whom there are many versions, most of which show the loyal warrior who destroys the villains. Movies like these are stories of positive relationships, of creative conquest over the forces of chaos. In their world they can reason with their foe, successfully negotiate with the enemy, and gain wealth and power from their enemy's treasure. In real life however these myths don't seem to work as well as a "Dances With Wolves" do in the movies or a Robin Hood do in the legends. In real life such things don't always go well for the leader. This is a story of Napoleon. Napoleon is considered to be one of the greatest conquerors in human history, and he certainly did conquer many things in his time. But Napoleon was anything but the "Robin Hood" that we would like to picture. Although there are many accounts of the Napoleonic era, let us take the version from Joseph Fouché, Napoleon's ex-minister of Police. As Minister of Police he had to go after the radicals and dissidents in the city of Paris during the 18th century. The period was filled with the Revolution, the Reign of Terror, and the Napoleonic Wars. In London during this time he recruited spies, and his agents then infiltrated the various cells of the radicals. They then secretly recorded the discussions and arguments of the radicals and published them in newspapers so the public could see the treason in the cells of the radicals, and also to intimidate others who supported them. Who's that cute little girl in John Cusack's pants in High Fidelity? (That was actually Penny, it turns out, which was also an almost-exact copy of Elizabeth Shue in the theater back then.) Is that Cameron Diaz? It's either her, or Traci Lords (right?), who turns up in The Big Lebowski. And in these days of pay-per-view porn, we're seeing some strange girls in seemingly authentic classic DVDs. It's like watching not-so-high-profile porn stars in videos where they just wear wigs and act convincingly to the camera. For instance, check out what a really good-looking porno actress looks like when she's in a Woody Allen movie: Why, yes, that's Gabrielle Anwar, who is being interviewed by Woody Allen for a film he's making about the art of acting, and she's wearing a weird dress that makes her look like she has cobwebs for a hairstyle. If that were a gag, it might be funny (sort of a Jane Austen sort of gag), but when you see it onscreen, it's just weird. And now I'm going to report that I've found a cute girl in a film I've never seen: Of course, there are lots of cute girls in a lot of movies. That's kind of the point. This isn't unusual. I'm not saying there is necessarily a conspiracy. But there's definitely a huge amount of money in making movies (and in the industry), and lots of people want it. It's interesting that the fun-looking girls in the vintage porn DVDs are mostly all high-profile women at the moment (Shue and Diaz, etc.) because that's who people with money are paying to watch porn, so that probably means that there are lots of people with money who like to watch porn. I don't have a problem with anyone having money or power or celebrities, or anything. For the people who have it, I guess I'm just surprised that so much money seems to go into making movies. How do they do that? Do they just make lots of low-budget movies (and pay other people to make them)? Do they have a line of people and they feed their girlfriends to the people at the end of the line? I really don't know. But I do know that there are lots of cute girls in a lot of films. I don
